NON-CREDIT CLASSES OPEN FOR TV RUSSIAN STUDENTS

For staff members and others following this winter's television course in elementary Russian, a non-credit tutorial class has been started on alternate Thursday nights under the Department of Slavic Studies. These classes are in addition to the special course of studies designed for Extension students taking Russian 1a for credit through a combination of TV lectures and on-campus groups.

The non-credit classes began on Nov. 17, but staff members may still enrol. Classes are held in Room 336 of the Mechanical Building and start at 8 p.m. Registration fee is $20.

Twenty-seven students have registered to take Russian 1a by television for credit towards the Bachelor of Arts degree. In addition, there have been at least as many inquiries again since registration closed on Nov. 1.

There also has been widespread interest from Toronto residents following the TV lectures on their own. More than 900 study guides and 750 textbooks have been sold. During the first week of the series, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—which is producing the lectures in co-operation with the University—received more than 700 letters and many phone calls about it, the overwhelming majority of them favourable.

The television series, "Beginning Russian", consists of 48 half-hour lectures by Professor Maya Jenkins and George Harjan, broadcast over CBLT at noon on Saturdays and Sundays. Besides watching the lectures, the 27 credit students are required to attend a two-hour class on campus every second week and to complete work and write examinations of the regular course.

A GIFT OF PETRONIANA

One of the world's finest collections of books by and about a mysterious Roman author, Petronius, is being presented to the University Library by Professor Gilbert Bagnani of the University College Classics Department.

The 150 books in the collection include the first separate edition of Petronius's work, printed in 1499, and examples of two other very rare editions of which only four or five copies are known to exist. Many of the works date from the 17th and 18th century, but the gift includes some modern examples, among them a private French edition illustrated by André Derain.

Petronius has titillated the curiosity and imagination of scholars ever since the first fragments of his novel, The Satyricon, were discovered during the Middle Ages. Little is known of the man or of his work. However, he is believed to be a certain Petronius who, as an intimate friend of Nero, won the title "Arbiter of Elegance".

Only about a quarter of The Satyricon has ever been found, and it is made up of many fragments discovered in various places and at different times. There are so many gaps in the story that one can only guess at the plot; what has survived, though, tells the story of three disreputable but genial scoundrels travelling through Italy.

The Satyricon is a unique work. It gives a picture of the ancient world left us by no other author, Greek or Roman, and tells it in language which Professor Bagnani calls the only surviving example of "non-U colloquial". It also is outstanding as literature in the way character is brought out through conversation; in this regard, Professor Bagnani compares Petronius to Jane Austen—a comparison, he adds, which would shock the lady concerned.

He attended the XXVth International Congress of Orientalists in Moscow, Aug. 8-17, and read a paper on "The Development of Sculpture in Pre-pottery Neolithic Jericho". One important by-product of his five-week sojourn in the Soviet Union was the acquisition of many books on art, archaeology, ethnology and history which are little known or unknown in the West and which will make an important addition to the Museum's library.

While in Europe during the summer, H. A. HICKL-SZABO visited the Kunsthistorische Museum and the Angewandte Kunst Museum in Vienna, and in England the Victoria and Albert and the British Museums.

On Oct. 20 the Rt. Hon. VINCENT MASSEY opened the Lee Collection of mediaeval and renaissance silver and objects of art, which is now on permanent loan by the Massey Foundation. This collection, made by Viscount Lee of Fareham and Viscountess Lee, was given to the Foundation for permanent exhibition in the University of Toronto, in order to strengthen the cultural ties between Great Britain and Canada. Until recently the collection was on display in Hart House.

The curator of the Department of Ethnology spent part of the season in Alberta where he collected interesting ethnological material from the Blackfoot Indians. In June, he and WALTER KENYON visited Fort Albany. The latter conducted preliminary investigations at the site of an early Hudson's Bay post there, dating from about 1700. During July and August Mr. Kenyon contained excavation of the prehistoric Indian village at the Miller site in Pickering.

RICHARD B. JOHNSTON completed the excavation of the Serpent Mounds on Rice Lake, and conducted an archaeological survey in the Trent Valley area.

SELWYN DEWDNEY continued his recording of Indian pictographs and reports an additional 23 sites recorded in Ontario, bringing the total up to more than a hundred.

Staff Changes

DR. KARL S. BERNHARDT has been appointed director of the Institute of Child Study, succeeding DR. W. E. BLATZ, who has retired after heading the Institute since its founding 35 years ago. Dr. Blatz continues on the University staff as professor of psychology. Dr. Bernhardt joined the University's Department of Psychology in 1927, and has been assistant director of the Institute of Child Study since 1940.

In the Royal Ontario Museum, DR. EDWARD S. ROGERS, a recent graduate of the University of New Mexico, has joined the Department of Ethnology staff. Other appointments are: H. A. HICKL-SZABO to assistant curator in the European department, HAROLD BURNHAM to assistant curator in the Textiles Department, and GEORGE F. DALES to assistant curator in the Near Eastern Department.

CHRISTMAS ON THE CAMPUS

Carol singing ushers in the traditional campus Christmas season this month. The Mary Magdalene Singers, led by Dr. Healey Willan, will make their annual visit to the Great Hall of Hart House at the Sunday Evening Concert on Dec. 4, and the next Friday evening the Varsity Christian Fellowship will sponsor a carolling tour of the undergraduate residences.

The Blue and White Christmas Tree on Dec. 15 will see nearly 1,200 students in the Great Hall for more carols, an exchange of gifts, and readings. On Dec. 16, Hart House will hold a more quiet celebration at its Overseas Students Christmas Dinner, when students from more than 30 countries will dine on turkey and plum pudding. The Hart House Glee Club will also sing carols at the Hospital for Sick Children.

Eighty boys from the University Settlement will be guests of Hart House on Dec.

14. For an hour and a half they will have the run of the athletic wing; then they will have dinner in the Great Hall, followed by an evening of carols, magic tricks and movies. Several student groups also are expected to hold parties and collect gifts for Settlement children this year as in the past.

The Student Christian Movement and the Canterbury Club will hold a joint Christmas party on Dec. 17. The Newman Club plans to mark the season with a creche in front of their St. George Street building.

Open house for faculty and students will be held by Friendly Relations with Overseas Students at their Willcocks Street house from 4 to 6 p.m. on December 23—a time many will want to relax after last-minute shopping. In addition, many overseas students are expected to spend Christmas at Canadian homes as a result of invitations issued through FROS.
